

George M Grow

Wald

Prophet at a Loss

Novel

based on real events

The World Formular

From
the series Books of Life®

www.georgegrow.com

Save your soul!

A fantastic journey to the core of reality

Wald tells the story of a young man who overcomes the conflicts of Faust, Harry Haller or Siddhartha and takes a step forward into a future, one which acts upon us and manifests among us even today. It's an enormous undertaking to create a Buddha who goes beyond the Buddha we have come to know and accept, especially for my friend, who - expelled from Vienna, pursued by Islamic terrorists - makes his way to Kashmir, where he finds his long-sought love and the reason for his existence. A comedy of salvation for theists and atheists, a humorous trip full of surprises and, as it seems, the long-sought master key to everyone's in this world.

Don't miss the next volume!

clubspectral.com
georgegrow.com

Copyright ©

2011-15 GEORGE M GROW AKA

GEORG PFANDLER A-1210 Vienna, Austria.

All rights reserved. Reprint, copy and sending electronically prohibited. Warning! Copy-hunter, water-stamp, Scout-Finder etc. worldwide!

Online Shop

Chapters

Signs	3
Delhi	15
Craig	33
Srinagar	41
The Houseboat	57
The First Steps	69
The Island	80
Among the Kashmiris	91
Have no Fear of Solitude	104
The Boatswains	111
The Sihdi	131
I-Court - Monoment	140
Internication	144
New Moon	155
Base of Operation Two	165
The Prophecy	175
Christian	190
The Prince	203
The Bridge	215
Base of Operations Three	222
The Pearl of the Orient	227
Crossfire	249
The Walk of Man	263
The More, the Merrier	282
The Unveiling	291
The Surprise Guest	309
The Piece of Evidence	324
The Green Salon	329
The Fleabag	332
The Auction	335
Attempted	346
The Angle	363
Do You Want To Buy A Bridge?	372
Even Warhorses Can Be Peaceful	375
The Five Seeds	377
On The Verge of a New Day	390

WALD

also in Spanish and German

Discover 8 Books of Life® more

Probably one of the best books ever written

EXTRACT, HOUSE OF DREAMWORKS

Once again, he is trying to persuade me to record another part of his report; and since he has just a short part in mind in order to span a certain range, I agree and get to know that he has a strange way of sleeping, since he never dreams. For all the innumerable things which keep him busy during the day, he hasn't been dreaming for quite a few years. He explains this by way of his deep sound sleep and this by the fact that he had tidied up in his soul pretty well. Back in the day, before he and Maher had moved in together and his second sight was in its infancy, he dreamt night for night. What he considered of importance was to ask the people he met in his dreams who they were and where they came from. This way, he got to know himself better till, for other reasons, his psyche was neaten up so much that he didn't care anymore when his room was in a mess. He questioned the sense of his dreams not by means of Freud's interpretation of dreams or by means of Jung's archetypes (since he understood dreams not so much as messages coming from a collective unconscious) but as products of his fantasy, as products resulting from the continuation of the cerebrum blocked off from the outside world. This surprises me somewhat, and I ask whether the collective unconscious was not the unity which he refers to so much in my ears as of today and get to hear that the collective unconscious deserves the aspect “collective” merely for the reason that people’s brains are quite similar and operate quite similarly, that it simply is the brain of the human species. And since he is an attentive young man, who doesn’t miss that my focused eye is gazing at my watch, he takes up this topic: that a good many of the figures who came up in his dreams provided him with excellent ideas. Still, he didn’t know that he was approaching “the great connection”, which was flooding his mind with ideas, improvements, inventions, projects and ventures by using the imaginary figures in his dreams. That way, which he didn’t properly understand at the time he only just had reached legal age, he came up with concepts like the Global Manifest, the Primal Income Tax, with the Plebiscite Catalog, with, as one might call it, Integral Europe, to the WIR (the Department for World Information Research), to the TTT (Turbo-Turbine-Transmission-System), to the multi-exposable celluloid MULTIFLASH, but also to a many of amusing things like his TRI CHESS or his wooden cushion against effeminacy or his board game D.C.DENT among innumerable drafts and projects, none of which he realized or tried to by himself. As soon as he heard “project”, he namely felt uncomfortable, since it always made him think of a projection. Then, however, when he was coming closer to the unitas, as we will hear and read about later, he dreamed of a show room, I'd like to say, of an installation that consolidated his ideas as one thing at one place and even solved the issue payment: If the idea is blurted out, it is not remunerated, and if it isn't blurted out, it's worth is hardly to comprehend.

I remember that he conferred with me about this problem. I urged him to keep his ideas to himself, told him that he won't gain a subsistence from them but was big surprised by his solution and attended the grand opening of his display salon in Vienna Alsergrund myself. I guess he had more than two hundred castles in the air made from cardboard or gesso hanging a bit down the ceiling. This show room, licensed under the name HOUSE OF DREAMWORKS and operated at great advertising expense, was quite well frequented. People looking for business ideas, industrialists developing new niches, managers, PR agents, product developers and artists on the lookout for gimmicks, as well journalists and official were counted among his clients. With lifted eyes and heads, they prowled around, and many of them found something that helped them on. Part of Wald's management was that his castles made of air gave away just enough to keep the money rolling into his desk although their purpose was clearly marked and his soft whisperings prompted his clients' fantasy. Provided with new ideas night for night, extended his regular sleep up to fourteen hours, his business with the castles made of air was such a hit that jealous souls – never the same ones – broke out his shop windows, believe it or not, three times and devastated it so heavily that he parted with it, took stock of himself and the world and finally came to be a mystic and the winner of two jackpots, then again a partier and again a mystic and to the point, which he remembers to his great amazement, he was dreaming after so many years again in the half hour he has been lying in the creaky bed on the fancy houseboat. The young man in his dream wore grey jeans and a dark blazer. Wald looked into his face and asked, "Who are you?" The young man in answered with a smile, then he gave Wald a blink and handed him over the flower of his hope, the blue flower, which he found on the little island a couple of hours ago. Then the apparition asked him to come along, and Wald followed him into the dark of his dream.

"Oh dear, look at that," he shouts in surprise sitting up in bed. "That was a dream!"

Wald jumps to his feet and walks well-dressed along the narrow corridor, hides behind a curtain and peers through the window in order to inspect the area after the prophet markers. “Nothing, but really nothing to see,” he utters to himself. His one-eyed view through the window is like gazing into a deep, black hole. Just the durga, the restaurant boat a few steps from his nose, is silhouetted against the void, otherwise not even a light in the distance. And since he isn’t sure whether he is not observed by the basically quite lovely bunch, whether his pursuers are not lying in wait for him a door and whether the stars can be seen again, though, he, in the feeling something is awaiting him, has grit and reasons enough for creeping into the salon, over the porch and the improvised gangplank to the firepit where the embers are still glowing. And as soon as he has sat down on a brick, there is a call under the veil of darkness.

“Mr. Wittman, there you are! I've some news of importance for you!”

“Who is it?” Wald exclaims jumped up into the gloom. The voice that has called him by name replies in a pleasant tone,

“Here, Mr. Wittman, here, right in front of your nose!”

Wald is still unable to see the man. Only then the darkness discloses an approaching silhouette. The outlines of a guy in grey jeans and a dark blazer grow visible. Is that the man from his dream? Wald can remember every word. He asks,

“Have you brought along a flower for me?”

“I have an invitation for you,” the beardless fellow responds stopping on the other side of the firepit. He puts out his hand and says that his name was Christian.

“Christian,” Wald asks the man who is roughly in his age. “Guess this is still your worst joke, isn’t it?”

“Follow me, Mr. Smith,” the man with the trendy, glossy leather shoes, which were certainly not cheap, asks. “You shall know that my master has sent me to pick you up!”

That he calls Wald “Smith” tells him that the stranger is animated by good intentions. He could either have introduced himself as Ali or Mohammed, and for what reason otherwise does he call Wald “Smith” if not in order to give him the hint that he will put his cards on the table when the moment has come. Aside from this, Wald knows to be well led and guided again since he left his uncle’s manor five days ago, that it was not by chance that Maher’s pursuers took up his trail, drove him on the manor and lastly to this distant place, that he met Craig, the writer, the blue flower ... and the man in his dream that shall be continued here, in reality. And because he just has to mind the profane affair yet, he asks the young man with a chain and a key on it he lets dangle through his fingers,

“And if I come along, what would be in it for me?”

Christian slinks around the firepit, puts his hand on Wald’s shoulder and says,

“My master is very influential and highly generous. Pay him the honor, and it will be to your advantage!” Wald holds his watch close to his eye and reads five past nine. “Know that my master is used to work at night, by day, he sleeps a lot,” the messenger adds. “He’s very interested in your view of things. Our nights are lonesome; we sit together after the women have gone to bed. My car is ready!”

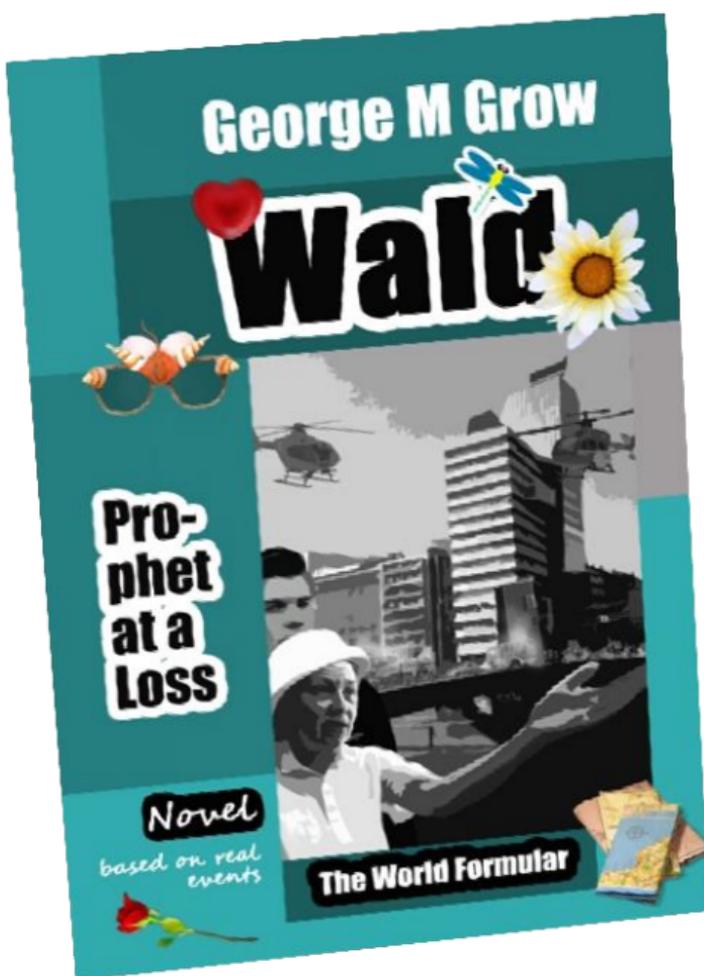

“Car?” Wald asks with sensational eyes. “Hem, well well,” he utters since he himself has not exactly learned to trust the signs. And in order to convince him of his good intentions, the fellow with the key says,

“Take it!”

Wald is thunderstruck.

“It’s for you,” the stranger says holding the pistol from his pocket closer to him.

End of the extract
From the novel
Wald – Prophet at a Loss

All rights reserved but you can send this pamphlet form as often you like to please you friends and family.

WALD

also in Spanish and German

Online Shop

Discover 8 Books of Life® more
Probably one of the best books ever
written

Online Shop

SAVE YOUR SOUL

With you donation, you probably can get real karma-points just here!

Transcendence begins here

There is no greater adventurer

Text & pictures copyright © 2011-15 by

GEORGE M GROW AKA

GEORG PFANDLER

A-1210 Vienna

All rights reserved

Books of Life® up from 5 € / $

Online Shop