

Homo integrales

is the superconscious person.

For one thing, the subconscious and the unconscious, and for the other thing, the superconscious can be distinguished from the human intentional consciousness, which focuses on objects of external and internal experience.

The superconscious is an unobjective and unreflective, but holistic and immediate knowledge that arises from the fact that our representatively directed acts and activities in our mind and psyche evoke reverberation of the world and inner touch with the world.

We have an over-awareness of these internal events, such as the personal acts, which are not objectively comprehensible. This also includes the self-confidence as unobjective knowing about what we profoundly are and have and more.

The Homo integrales processes a decisive step farther: He not only has knowledge of the coherence of certain things - of their interfaces. Too, his knowledge includes the coherence of seemingly counterproductive and absurde things and occurrences. His reverberation of the world and inner touch with the world does not come from being directed at his inner self (soul, mysticism), but from understanding, experiencing and the value of his existence and fate in cosmos.
